The END

NIGHT RIDE

There was a terrific banging on the shutters. "Hey, Doc! Wake up! Emergency!" shouted an excited voice.

Dr. Greg Brett had been deeply asleep, but the call to duty roused him instantly. He sprang out of bed, stepped to the window and threw open a shutter. In the waning moonlight he made out the dark figure of a horseman.

"Hurry, Doc!" exclaimed the man. "Matter of life and death."

"I'll come," answered the doctor, already slipping into shirt and trousers. "Where to?"

"The Line T spread," responded the rider after a slight hesitation.

"Long ride," thought Doc Brett, pulling on his boots.

Neither man wasted any further words. When the Doc was ready he mounted and followed the other man swiftly out of town. They rode at a gallop, the thunder of their horses' hoofs echoing off into the blue-black night.

When they approached the fork, the rider said, "Left here!"

"But the Line T is to the right," protested Doc.

"I said left!"

A revolver barrel, glinting in the moonlight, punctuated the statement. Doc had no choice but to comply.

They rode for perhaps a mile further. Doc tried, by glancing sideways, to get a good look at his captor. But the man's hat was pulled well down. Doc realized that in the darkness he had not seen enough of the fellow to be able to recognize him again. Their passage, up to now, had been over moderately soft dirt. Doc knew their horses had left a trail that would be easy to follow.

But they were turning sharply now, over rocks. The hoofs would leave no imprint.

Doc wanted to leave a trail. He had a hunch he might need rescuing. He reached for his medicine kit in the saddle bag.

The other man hollered, "Hey! What you doing? Get those hands up."

Doc raised his hands, saying casually, "Very well. But if this is an emergency such as you claim I thought I might as well be getting my instruments ready. There's no time to waste in treating a serious gunshot wound."

"Gunshot? I didn't tell you it was a gunshot wound."

"No, but I imagine it was a good guess. You owlhoots always get shot, sooner or later; if you don't hang first."

"Button your lip!" growled the other man. He was silent for a second then he continued, "All right. Go ahead. Open your satchel and get your tools ready. But no tricks."

Doc Brett opened his case. They were riding slower now, up-grade. He fumbled in the satchel and got out a big pill bottle. His captor watched with hawk eyes.

"If you're worried about me pulling a gun on you, forget it," said the doctor. "I don't even own a gun. I cure people, not kill them."

The other peered in the case and satisfied himself there was no weapon hidden there. Then he relaxed his watchfulness. Quietly, unobserved, Doc began dropping little pills at intervals as they rode.

"Now maybe somebody will find me, before it's too late," he thought grimly.

The doctor was blindfolded during the last part of the journey. He got the impression from the hollow echoing of the horses' footsteps that they were passing through an archway or tunnel, perhaps a cave entrance. With the blindfold still on, he was helped to dismount. He was led, he knew not where, and then the blindfold was abruptly removed.

He was in a moderately large "room". Part of an abandoned mine shaft, he guessed. The light from one flickering oil lantern was rather dim. He was aware of several men lingering in the shadows, but the focal point for him was a big man lying on a pallet. There was one crude bandage around the man's side and another on his head. And he was masked.

Without question or comment, the doctor became strictly professional. He went about the business of examining the patient with steady hand and cool eye. First he looked at the side wound. Then he said, "The mask will have to come off. Otherwise I can't examine the head wound properly."

"The mask stays on," growled the patient.

"Then I can't be responsible. You may die," said Doc flatly.

After considering this for a moment, the man on the pallet said, "O.K." and promptly tore off the mask.

Doc Brett said nothing, but he couldn't hide the look of recognition and astonishment that came into his face.

"O.K., Doc. So you recognize me. I could see it in your face," declared the man. "All right. I'm Bart Sloane. I'm carrying a lot of deadwood. At least seven sheriffs have got a special noose reserved for me. But they're not going to get me. And if you'll be a good little doc and fix me up right, you'll be so well paid you can buy enough pills to cure every sick man, dog, steer and hooty owl in all of Texas."

"It's not a question of pay," responded the doctor, gravely. "It's my duty to heal you, if I can."

After he had treated and dressed the wounds, Doc Brett was led from the big room to a narrow passage and into what was apparently a dead end niche. A lantern was held so he could see a crude bed of matting. "You can rest here now, Doc," said the man who was apparently his guard, "until it's time to take off those bandages again."

Doc Brett had learned that a doctor must sleep when he can. He lay on the mat and in a matter of seconds was dead to the world. When he awakened, he imagined it was day. He confirmed this by looking at his watch. He yawned and started to rise. Then, as he heard voices, he lay back perfectly still.

The voices were whispering, but through some accoustical peculiarity sometimes found in caves, the words were echoed to Doc almost as clearly as if the speaker's lips had been to his ear. They said:

"Won't the doc report on us when he leaves here?"

"He'll never leave here."

"But we can't keep him. He'll cause us trouble."

"No he won't. This old mine shaft is too good a hideout to take chances with. Good hide-outs are rare, but there's a sawbones born every minute. As soon as he has fixed up my wounds real good the doc will get paid off, with a bullet through the heart."

The doc's heart gave an extra thump as if it, too, had heard. But it soon calmed down as Dr. Brett thought, "It'll take some time to get those wounds in shape. Before then, I'll be missed. The sheriff will follow that trail of pills and rescue me."

Another voice was heard. It wasn't whispering. "Hey, Sloane," it said, "I think that Doc's kind of careless. One of the horses broke loose this morning and I went after it. I found it going over the rocks, lapping up little white pills. It ate the last one before I got to it. I figured they must have been little sugar pills that the doc dropped accidentally."

"Accidentally?" Doc recognized Sloane's voice and husky laugh. "Wasn't any accident. That doc is nobody's fool. You sure the horse ate all the pills?"

"Every last one!"

Doc's heart skipped another beat. No chance that the sheriff would rescue him now.

Weak from his wounds, Bart Sloane had fallen asleep. Doc worked around the head wound carefully, delicately so as not to wake the patient. A guard was watching, but the Doc's broad shoulders shielded his activity. Presently the patient opened his eyes. He looked up at the doctor who seemed extremely grave, worried.

"What's the matter, Doc? These wounds serious?"

"Oh, no. You'll recover from the wounds all right. But . . ." Doc Brett leaned close to the patient and said in a stage whisper. "I don't want to alarm the others, but you look as if you've got small pox!"

Doc had guessed right. The whispered words carried throughout the hide-out. From a safe distance the men looked at the red dotted face of their leader. Then they fled in terror. Doc could hear the clatter of their horses fading away.

Bart Sloane's feelings were mixed: Anger at his men for deserting him, terror that he might die of smallpox.

Doc, who had borrowed his gun, chuckled. "Don't worry, if you die, it'll be at the end of a rope. I merely said you looked as if you had smallpox. In this dim light your boys couldn't see that those red dots were merely made with iodine."

After he was jailed, Bart Sloane was so angry at his men for deserting him he gave all their names and other pertinent information to the sheriff. They were quickly rounded up. Later, when he was given the reward money, Doc Brett chuckled, "Now I can buy enough pills to cure every sick man, dog, steer and hooty owl in all of Texas!"

I Can Make YOU a New Man, Too, In Only 15 Minutes a Day!

CHARLES ATLAS

Holder of title "The World's Most Perfectly Developed Man."

PEOPLE used to laugh at my skinny 97-pound body. I was ashamed to strip for sports or for a swim. Girls made fun of me behind my back. THEN I discovered my body-building system "Dynamic Tension." It made me such a complete specimen of manhood that I hold the title, "The World's Most Perfectly Developed Man."

What's My Secret?

When you look in the mirror and see a healthy, husky, fellow smiling back at you — then you'll be astonished at how fast "Dynamic Tension" GETS RESULTS! It is the easy, NATURAL method and you can practice in the privacy of your own room — JUST 15 MINUTES EACH DAY. Just watch your scrawny chest and shoulder muscles begin to swell — those spindly arms and legs of yours bulge — and your whole body starts to feel "alive" full of zip and go!

Thousands are becoming husky — my way. I give you no gadgets to fool with. With "Dynamic Tension" you simply utilize the dormant muscle-power in your own body — watch it grow and multiply into real solid LIVE MUSCLE.

FREE My 32-Page Illustrated Book is Yours — Not for $1.00 or 10c — But FREE
